

How do we challenge pupils in French lessons?

More able children in French will be working at a higher level which can be seen in their books through differentiated work. The children are challenged through French lessons by:

- Being encouraged to make links to the wider curriculum such as geography, history and maths.
- More abled children are encouraged to focus deeper into the grammar element of the language and how it translates back to English.
- Being encouraged to discuss and consider how French has and can have an impact on the world in the past and the future.
- Encouraged on discussing how French could help path their way to a career.
- Having opportunities for activities including afterschool clubs, trips and links with secondary schools language departments.
- Encouraging children to develop, share their passion for the subject with others and take on board advice and suggestions to develop their ideas.
- They are included to take on more of an ambassador/leader role in the lesson by supporting their peers.
- Students will be used to highlight in oral lessons the pronunciation of words.

What jobs can French lead to in the future for more abled pupils?
